VIREYA RHODODENDRON CULTIVARS

The peripheral planters in the west wing of the Curvilinear range contain selected cultivars of rhododendrons.

The cultivars displayed here, are almost exclusively derived from the 300 species in section vireya (displayed in the central beds). By and large these are slightly tender and can only be grown in frost-free areas, or under glass.

Section vireya is characterised by: the presence of minute scales on the surface of the plant; an ovary in which the upper end tapers gradually into the style, without junction; their geographical distribution, centred on South-East Asia; and the lack of a blue pigment in the flowers, which are never spotted.
